Abstract

The central argument of this paper is that many of the tools developed to strengthen for-profit businesses can be applied to NGOs (Non Governmental Organisations) to make them more effective, accountable and sustainable. The paper addresses a lacuna in the development literature by defining and describing how business tools can be effectively transferred to NGOs. It examines the implementation of ISO 9000 Quality Standard by one NGO, the Cambodia Trust. The experiences of Cambodia Trust demonstrate that business tools have a place in NGO management. The paper also questions the extent to which the Cambodian experience can be seen as best practice for NGOs.
